

Dr. Wiley, the government chemist, who is authorized by congress to make an investigation of adulteration of food preservatives and coloring matters to determine their relation to digestion and health, and to establish the principles which should guide their use, says that from a discussion of this matter the general public is likely to think there is no pure food to be obtained in the United States. Nothing, it is said on good authority, could be farther from the truth than this. In fact, most of the goods offered for sale in our markets are perfectly pure and wholesome. Less than five per cent. of the purchase from a reliable firm would be found to be adulterated. "But," says Dr. Wiley, "with 30,000,000 wage-earners in this country, who spend three-fourths of the $25,000,000 a day earned by them for food and its preparation, too much attention cannot be given to the subject. All adulterants are not harmful, and if the workman wants to buy oleomargarine, labeled as such, because it is cheaper, he should be allowed that pleasure. In the same manner, he should be given glucose instead of honey if he wants it, and is not deceived in the buying. If some esthetic folks care more for the delicate green tint of their pens and such other vegetables than they do for the good of their digestive organs, they should be humored with the dose of zinc and copper salts that is required to give it, but every can should be labeled as containing zinc and copper salts, as well as peas, so others, who do care, may avoid it. In fact, it is only when the law compels a merchant to sell goods with the name of adulterant, preservative and coloring matter used in putting up the goods printed in plain letters on the label that this traffic can be stopped. Allow people to know what they are getting, as a protection to the innocent, and the others can choose for themselves."

To Save Her Child

From frightful disfigurement Mrs. Nannie Gallagher, of LaGrange, Ga., applied Bucklen's Arnica salve to great sores on her head and face, and writes its quick cure exceeded all her hopes. It works wonders in sores, bruises, skin eruptions, cuts, burns scalds and piles. 25c. Cure guaranteed by all druggists.

Out of respect for the memory of his wife a Pittston (Pa.) man played 27 pieces of music over her grave in Pittston cemetery. She died a year ago. The strange concert was witnessed by a large crowd, among them a number of boys who jeered at the player. Others guarded the bereaved man as he sat upon the newly-made mound and played the Scottish bagpipe for an hour.

"Dine here and you will never dine anywhere else," is a startling though doubtless meant to be alluring, statement in the window of a restaurant in Camden, N. J. Hung underneath the above was a notice written on a piece of legal cap paper, that read: "Wanted, a boy, who can open oysters with a reference."

FEW ORATORS IN PARLIAMENT

British Statesmen Are Not Distinguished for Their Forensic Eloquence.

Although the British parliament has doubtless developed some orators of exceptional power, the majority of the leading members cannot be classed as eloquent men. Only a few of the prominent men in parliament to-day, it is said, are really effective speakers from the popular point of view. There is no one who approaches Gladstone in his best days, though, taken as a whole, the general level of debate has never been so high. Joseph Chamberlain is the man who seems to awaken greatest interest by his force of expression and his frequent gestures—the swift movement of the arms, as, with his finger uplifted and body bent forward, he develops his arguments, and the smiling of clenched fist on open palm as he drives his point home, says the Chicago Chronicle.

Mr. Balfour is not at all like Chamberlain. Only under great stress of emotion does he strike the table or strike his hands together. He rather suggests the need of some prop as he leans wearily against a dispatch box and stretches out a languid arm and lily-white hand to emphasize a point. He is not fluent and often seems to be stammering, like a veritable Hamlet. Mr. Wyndham is almost too polished, while the graceful nodding of his head and the studied movements of his arm distract attention and weaken the force of his statements. Mr. Brodick is the automaton of the conservative party, and except for a curious jerk of his arm and an occasional thump on the table his words follow one another with machine-like regularity.

The liberal bench possesses speakers with mannerisms quite as marked as the ministerial bench. Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman has a curious little trick of fanning himself with any slip of paper which comes handy. But beyond an occasional thump upon the table or a sudden clutch at the silk cloth of his frock coat, he does not inspire terror. Sir William Harcourt is the largest figure in his party, and every member of parliament is familiar with the classic way he thrusts one arm into the breast of his coat as he sits down. Mr. Morley, as a speaker, has been said to be "a capital example of good matter triumphing over bad form." But he astonished the house by his vigor recently. Mr. Asquith prepares his speeches with minute care, and he delights in sonorous phrases and long words. But the movements of his hands are curiously quick and nervous as he seizes a paper or brings the flat of his palm down on the table.

DESCENDANTS OF DAVID.

Certain Russian Families That Claim Direct Descent from Israel's King.

That there are certain families among the Jews who claim to be the lineal descendants of King David is a well-known fact. Concerning the most pronounced claimants to this honor, Ueber Land and Meer gives the following details:

"The recent death of Prince Alexander Konstantinowitch Imeretinsky, in Russia, who was governor general of Warsaw, brings into public prominence again the interesting genealogical tradition that in this family are to be found the most thoroughly accredited descendants of King David. The Imeretinskys are a branch of the princely family of the Bagratian, which claims that it can trace its ancestry up to the great Jewish ruler. Among others, the Byzantine emperor, Constantine Porphyrogeneta, in his annals, has recognized the claim of this family to a Davidic descent. It is noteworthy that the book which in Russia occupies the position held by the 'Almanach de Gotha' in central Europe, namely, the 'Annuaire de la Noblesse de Russie' contains les Princes de l'Empire, and printed by the Imperial publication house in St. Petersburg, gives a most complete account of the Jewish origin and descent of the princes of the houses of Bagratian and Imeretinsky, and emphasizes the fact that not a single sovereign dynasty in Europe can trace its line further back than they. It is a fact that in the genealogy of this family the name of David often occurs. David I. having died in 881. The members of this family in the 'Annuaire' acknowledge that originally they were of Jewish origin, but that generations ago the persecutions of the times had compelled their ancestors to embrace the Christian religion. It is further known that members of this princely family as early as the fifteenth century were monks."

PERSONAL AND IMPERSONAL.

Alexander Campbell, the Boston golfer, has a "driver" of ancient pattern which is over 200 years old and was originally the property of the earl of Eglinton.

Justice Harlan is quoted as saying that there is an unwritten law forbidding a member of the supreme court of the United States to be a candidate for president.

James William DeWolf, great-grandson of Daniel Defoe, the author of "Robinson Crusoe," is a pauper in the almshouse at Chelmsford, and is probably the last of his race.

George IV. was the first royal patron of the English races, and between 1784 and 1792, as prince of Wales, he won 185 races, including the derby and 18 king's plates.

Some retail merchants recently employed a man to do their collecting. He dressed himself in bright scarlet clothes. In three months 75 per cent. of the debtors had paid or left town.

M. Laberdesque, who fought the recent duel with Max Regis, is but 27 years old, yet has had a remarkably adventurous career. He was born in Cuba, fought in several Central American revolutions and in Algeria, and has been a principal in 43 duels with sword, pistol and yaghatan.

Hugh Douglass Wise, who has been made a captain in the Ninth regiment, United States infantry, is the young officer who carried his camera up the hill at San Juan and rendered important service by photographing the position of the enemy. Capt. Wise was graduated from West Point in 1894.

Miss Emma L. Roedter, of Indianapolis, according to the News of that city, has the distinction of being one of the six students of Bach in America in possession of the complete works of Bach, as edited by the Bach Gesellschaft, of Leipzig. This society was founded in 1850 on the one hundredth anniversary of Bach's death, for the purpose of collecting and promoting the study of Bach's music.

ENGINEERING IN CHINA.

The Celestials Anticipated American Inventions.

From what has been learned about China in recent years the conclusion lies uppermost that while Chinese engineering has proceeded quite successfully along static lines, it has rested for centuries without progress in all that involves motion. Thus, while their fixed structures are notable and frequently beautiful, their machines for doing work and moving people and goods are rudely primitive. The curious Chinese wheelbarrow is still a most important factor in land transportation, but what in the United States, for example, is considered very modern "cage construction" for buildings, has been practiced by the Chinese for centuries, and is found all over China. This is one of the many interesting observations made by Mr. William Barclay Parsons during a railroad survey in 1898, and recorded in his book entitled: "An American Engineer in China," says Cassier's Magazine.

Another example of how the Chinese have, by centuries, anticipated some of our modern inventions is afforded by the system of dividing up the hull of a boat by bulkheads as a protection against leakage, this, with the Chinese, dating back further than the thirteenth century. The number of compartments in the Chinese trading vessels depended upon the number of owners in a vessel. Mr. John H. Morrison, in an article in Cassier's Magazine several years ago, told that in a large vessel there was sometimes as many as 100, each partner shipping his own goods in his own compartment, which he fitted up to suit himself, and either went in person or sent one of his family to take charge of his property.

There is thus some question whether the Chinese bulkheads or compartment system was designed for insuring safety for the vessel, rather than for commercial convenience; but there is no doubt that the compartment plan existed at that early date and that the compartments, too, were made substantial and waterproof.

How Smoke Travels.

A dim, dry fog prevalent in Germany, known as the Hohrauch, has been traced for a distance of 150 miles from its supposed source without great diminution of its intensity or distinctive smell. It is commonly attributed to the extensive burning of peat in North Germany, where the tillers of the soil will at certain seasons hoe up the rank growth of their fields and burn it on a large scale. A haze of a very similar description has been observed in New England and Upper Canada; so also, according to Livingstone, in the Barotse valley; the cause in all cases being assigned to the extensive burning, often at a great distance, of grass or forest timber. The self-same results must be looked for in the case of the burning of coal on an equally gigantic scale in London, with the one difference that the effect must be incomparably more pernicious.—London Mail.

Group of Royal Cousins.

The queen of the Netherlands, her husband, Prince Henry, and the German emperor are all third cousins, all three being great-great-grandchildren of King Frederick William II. of Prussia. Prince Henry is also descended from Frederick William III., so that he is the emperor's second cousin. The queen is also somewhat nearer than a third cousin to the emperor, through their descent from Emperor Paul of Russia.—London News.
